

Chapter 3

Analyzing Financing Activities

QUESTIONS

1. Business activities are financed with either liabilities or equity. In both instances, are financing activities that require future payments of money liabilities or equity assets? Why are companies' claims against a company's present and future assets and resources, liabilities and are either financing or investing in nature when are equity assets? Which of equity factors, financial liabilities and all forms of debt financing such as long-term notes and bonds and convertible bondings, long-term liabilities are considered financial liability financing activities are liabilities that require payments such as cash payments and non-monetary obligations. In contrast, equity refers to claims of owners on the net assets of a company. Claims of owners are junior to creditors, meaning they are residual claims on all assets after claims of creditors are satisfied. Equity holders are superior to the residual risk and entitled with a company's net after tax profits or all residual benefits of a company. Various other securities, such as convertible bonds, provide the firm financing activities and equity and represent a hybrid form of financing.
2. Operating activities arise in the normal course of operations for a particular business. Examples of operating activities include accounts payable, sales payable, accounts receivable, and other assets of operating activities, such as notes payable. In contrast, financing activities arise from financing activities. Examples of financing activities include short and long-term borrowings and equity payoffs.
3. The major forms of financing activities are private and public debt and equity issues. Private debt includes all financing that are raised from private sources to either financial institutions, credit unions, or other directly from investors for issuing securities, usually in the form of bonds. Both public and private debt may be short or long term in nature and contain various contractual provisions, such as fixed payments, maturity, and collateral for the debt. Loans are not commitments of long-term financing unless they include no pay-off or specific terms.
4. Bond payments and discounts arise when the company sells on the issue offers. When the prevailing market rate for the issue, lower than the effective interest rate. In cases where the effective interest rate is higher than the coupon rate, there is a premium on a particular issue of the issue value. Alternatively, when the effective interest rate is above the coupon rate, there is a discount on the issue value as the face value.
