Iron Nutrition in Soils and Plants Javier Abadía,2012-12-06 Iron is a major constituent of the earth crust However under alkaline conditions commonly found in arid and semi arid environments iron becomes unavailable to plants When plants are affected by a shortage of iron their leaves become yellow chlorotic and both plant growth and crop yield are reduced The roots of plants affected by iron deficiency may develop a series of responses directed to improve iron uptake such as increased proton excretion and iron reduction capabilities or excretion of iron chelators called siderophores Iron deficiency affects major crops worldwide including some of major economic importance such as fruit trees and others Correction of iron deficiency is usually implemented through costly application of synthetic chelates Since these correction methods are very expensive the competitiveness of farmers is often reduced and iron deficiency may become a limiting factor for the maintenance introduction or expansion of some crops In spite of the many years devoted to the study of iron deficiency the knowledge of iron deficiency in soils and plants is still fragmentary in many aspects We have only incomplete information on the processes at the molecular level that make some plant species and cultivars unable to take and utilize iron from the soil whereas other plants grow satisfactorily under the same conditions Guidelines for Canadian Drinking Water Quality ,2023

Sound Structure in Music Robert Erickson, 1975-01-01 Iron Nutrition and Interactions in Plants Yona Chen, Y. Hadar, 1991-03-31 Many agricultural crops worldwide especially in semi arid climates suffer from iron deficiencies Among plants sensitive to iron deficiency are apples avocado bananas barley beans citrus cotton grapes peanuts pecans potatoes sorghum soybeans and numerous ornamental plants Deficiencies are usually recognized by chlorotic in new leaves and are typically found among sensitive crops grown in calcareous or yellowed interveinal areas soils which cover over 30% of the earth's land surface Iron deficiency may lead in extreme cases to complete crop failure In intensive agriculture on calcareous soils iron often becomes a major limiting nutrient for optimal crop production thus correction of iron deficiency is required Various chemicals and practices are available They are however costly and do not always result in a complete remedy of the deficiency Crucial questions relative to the cost benefit equation such as the recovery rate of plants and the long term fertilizing effect have not yet been resolved The complexity of iron nutrition problems requires an understanding of the chemistry of iron oxides in soils of the chemistry of both natural and synthetic chelates of rhizosphere microbiology and biochemistry and of the physiological involvement of the plant in iron uptake and transport
