Afforestation in Arid Zones R.N. Kaul, 2012-12-06 The increasing world population is already causing intensive pressure on the most productive areas of the earth s surface Hopes of improved living standards if realised will increase the pressure still further The need to make better use of less productive areas thus becomes an urgent priority for human endeavour In this respect the arid and semi arid regions of the world occupying about 11 000 million acres or 4 500 million hectares roughly one third of the total land surface pose a constant challenge to man s technological skill Though the possibilities of economic use of the real deserts are inherently limited there remain vast areas with less extreme conditions where sustained research is capable of yielding substantial gains in productivity The problem is so large that it can be solved only by the coordinated efforts of workers in many countries and many disciplines Forestry has a special part to play not only for its potential value for wood production but still more for the beneficial effects of shelter from desiccating winds which so commonly accompany arid conditions Mr KA UL is to be congratulated on his initiative to pool the results of research on afforestation in arid zones in many parts of the world and to present them in a single volume in the form of separate monographs

Etruscans Begin to Speak Zacharie Mayani, 1964-01-01

Below-ground Interactions in Tropical Agroecosystems Meine van Noordwijk, Georg Cadisch, C.

K. Ong, 2004 Below ground interactions are often seen as the dark side of agroecosystems especially when more than one crop is grown on the same piece of land at the same time this book aims to review the amount of light the past decade of research has shed on this topic It also aims to review how far we have come in unravelling the positive and negative aspects of these interactions and how in dialogue with farmers we can use the generic principles that are now emerging to look for site specific solutions A guide to forest-water management Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, International Union of Forest Research Organizations, U.S. Department of Agriculture, 2021-08-24 Many people worldwide lack adequate access to clean water to meet basic needs and many important economic activities such as energy production and agriculture also require water Climate change is likely to aggravate water stress As temperatures rise ecosystems and the human plant and animal communities that depend on them will need more water to maintain their health and to thrive Forests and trees are integral to the global water cycle and therefore vital for water security they regulate water quantity quality and timing and provide protective functions against for example soil and coastal erosion flooding and avalanches Forested watersheds provide 75 percent of our freshwater delivering water to over half the world's population The purpose of A Guide to Forest Water Management is to improve the global information base on the protective functions of forests for soil and water It reviews emerging techniques and methodologies provides guidance and recommendations on how to manage forests for their water ecosystem services and offers insights into the business and economic cases for managing forests for water ecosystem services Intact native forests and well managed planted forests can be a relatively cheap approach to water management while generating multiple co benefits Water security is a significant global challenge but this paper argues that water centered forests can provide nature based solutions to ensuring global water resilience

Regulation of Body Weight Claude Bouchard, G. A. Bray, 1996-06-19 The fact that about 30-40% of the adults in the Western world are overweight or obese testifies to the frequency of the disturbances in body weight regulation Scientists have established that caloric intake macronutrient composition of the diet basal and resting metabolic rate thermic response to food energy expenditure associated with movement and physical activity and preferential storage of the surplus of calories as fat or lean tissues are critical determinants of energy balance and body weight. While much has been learned, the field is poised for major advances with the advent of a variety of imaging techniques, progress in quantitative and molecular genetics, use of transgenic rodent models and of breeding experiments with informative inbred strains, availability of stable isotopes for metabolic and behavioral studies, and a growing number of useful experimental animal and human models. This volume takes an integrative approach to obesity. It is structured around four major topics: 1) the animal and human models currently available for the study of body weight regulation with their strengths and limitations; 2) the molecular and genetic basis of the regulation of body weight; 3) the metabolic and physiological mechanisms involved; and 4) the behavioral and social determinants. The 13 background papers provide a critical overview of the present knowledge base, while the group reports summarize the extensive deliberations of 38 international experts. Particular emphasis has been given to promising research areas and on the advances needed to ensure a better understanding of the biological and behavioral mechanisms of the regulation of body weight, with a particular emphasis on overweight and obesity.
